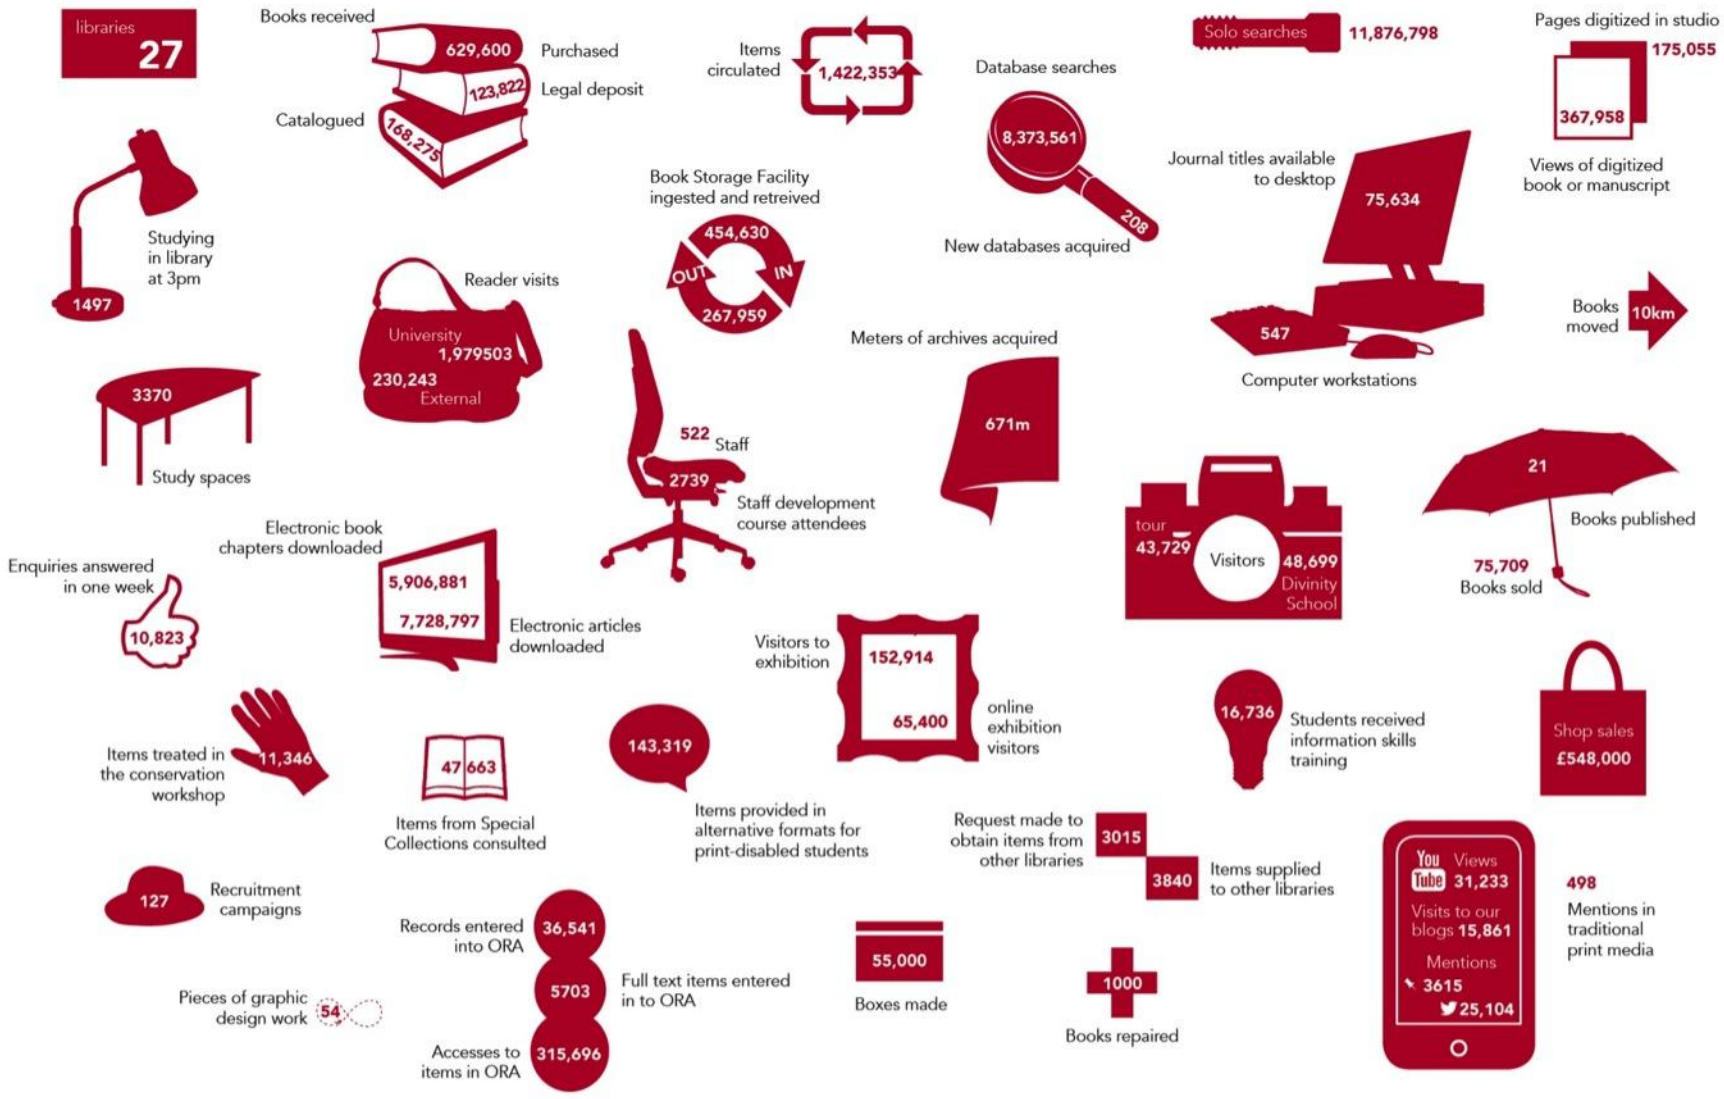
Overview of the Bodleian Libraries



Local collaboration

- Why collaborate locally?
  - Shared services:
    - To generate economies of scale
    - To share costs – making possible for all what would be impossible for one
    - To leverage distributed skills and facilities
    - To utilise the power of the network
  - Critical need for leadership, vision and commitment
- Examples:
  - Storage and Conservation
  - Catalogues
  - Staff training & development
  - Engagement with communities

Bodleian Library Special Collections

Moves of special collections into the Weston Library will take place until summer 2016 as material currently stored at other locations is transferred. During this period items can still be ordered as normal but please be aware that material may take up to 24 hours to arrive in the reading room and, on occasion, entire collections will be unavailable for up to 2 weeks whilst they are relocated.

For more information please see Where to consult Special Collections or email specialcollections.bookings@bodleian.ox.ac.uk to book material.

CHAPTER ONE
EARLY INFLUENCES
My earliest memory is of sitting on the back steps of a square little house, Beechurst, in Love Lane, Pontefract. I must have been three years old at the time and I was looking out at a stretch of unkempt grass surrounded by a brick wall which we called a garden. On re-visiting the house many years later I found it was a very modest home, but to me it represented solidity and security. Beyond our wall was a cinder track which separated us from a terraced row of houses occupied mainly by miners from the surrounding pits. I remember them because we used to play with the miners' children, learning some colourful language from them. My mother used to recount how I came in one day from a rough and tumble on the cinder track and, pointing to my elder brother, Jimmie, lisped:
"Look at icka Dimmy. Isn't he a mucky little buggar."

At this stage my mother was the dominant influence in my life.
She was a William Morris Socialist; waliness must be turned

Help us to describe the Libraries' digitised music collections

The Bodleian Libraries are looking for your help in increasing access to their music collections. Over four thousand digitised scores, mostly piano music from the nineteenth century, many of which have illustrated covers, have now been made available online. By describing these images, you will not only be helping to provide access to this valuable but hitherto 'hidden' collection, you will also be facilitating future research into popular music of the period and the wider social function which it performed during the Victorian age.

The purpose of this Zooniverse platform is purely to make the scores available for description by members of the public. For this reason, scores to be described are presented in a random order, to help ensure that the less immediately attractive scores are dealt with as well as the more exciting items. Although it is possible to browse through all the scores in title order, by

Global collaboration

- Why collaborate globally?
  - To develop shared services: one institution cannot do everything alone
  - To support changing modes of scholarship –global, connected, interdependent
  - To enable operation at scale
  - To deepen impact, outreach, and branding
  - To enable us to do more with less
  - To leverage funding opportunities

● ○ ○

The Bodleian Libraries of the University of Oxford and the Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana (Vatican Library) have joined efforts in a landmark digitization project with the aim of opening up their repositories of ancient texts. Over the course of the next four years, 1.5 million pages from their remarkable collections will be made freely available online to researchers and to the general public.

The initiative has been made possible by a £2 million award from the Polonsky Foundation. Dr Leonard Polonsky, who is committed to democratizing access to information, sees the increase of digital access to these two library collections — among the greatest in the world — as a significant step in sharing intellectual resources on a global scale.

Description: The Bodleian Libraries is the integrated library service of the University of Oxford. Established in 2000, it comprises nearly 40 libraries. Among these are major research libraries - including the Bodleian Library, which has been a library of legal deposit for almost 400 years - as well as libraries attached to faculties, departments and other institutions of the University. The combined collections of the Bodleian Libraries number more than 11 million printed items, and include extensive special collections and manuscripts.

About CERL

Welcome to CERL, the Consortium of European Research Libraries. The Consortium's purpose is to share resources and expertise between research libraries with a view to improving access to, as well as exploitation and preservation of, the European printed heritage.

The Consortium was formed in 1992 on the initiative of research libraries in many European countries and legally came into being in June 1994. CERL's primary objective is to record all books printed in Europe during the hand-press period, c.1450–c.1830, in a machine-readable catalogue, called the Heritage of the Printed Book Database or HPB (originally called the Hand Press Book Database). Two other significant initiatives are the development of the CERL Thesaurus and the CERL Portal.

The diagram below shows all CERL activities and services, and their users.

Chapter 7th

21 45

It was on a dreary night of November that I beheld ~~the fiend~~ my man completed; and with an anxiety that almost amount ed to agony I collected instruments of life around me ~~and endeavour~~ that I might infuse a spark of being into the lifeless thing that lay at my feet. It was already one in the morning, the rain pattered dismally against the window panes, & my candle was nearly burnt out, when by the glimmer of the half extinguish ed light I saw the dull yellow eye of the creature open — It breathed hard,

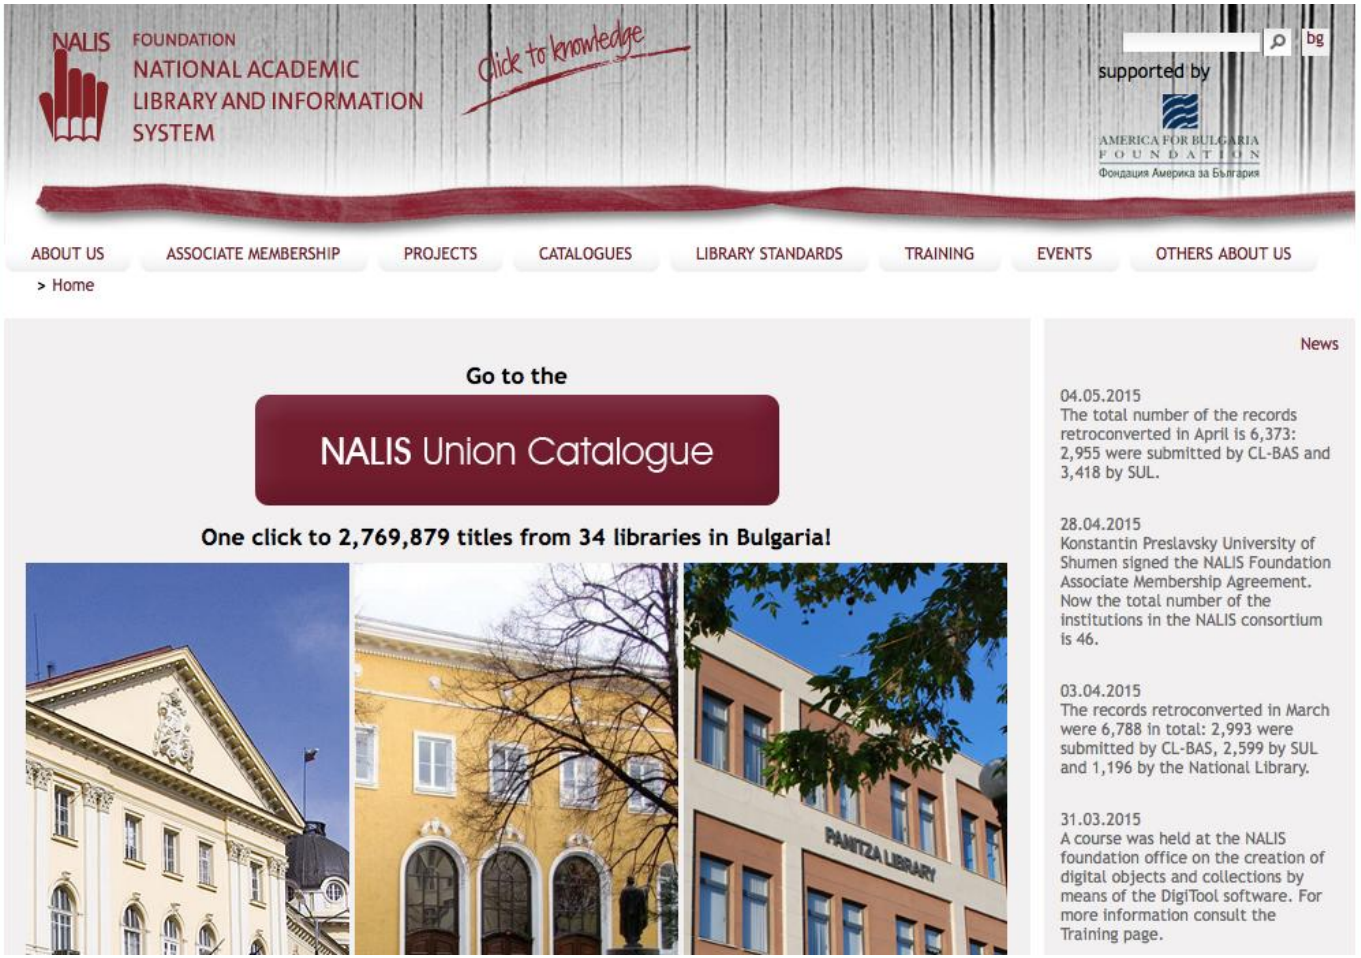
Lessons learned (1)

- Collaboration is a necessity in today's world
- Collaboration is unavoidable in a digital age
- Collaboration is costly and takes time
- Collaboration can be fun
- Collaboration is normally hard work
- Collaboration requires commitment, leadership, and Trust.

Lessons learned (2)

- Need to ensure collaboration fits strategic goals
- Need to develop staff culture to embrace collaboration
- Inevitable pressures: harmonization vs customization
  - Technical standards
  - Quality standards
  - Approaches (eg metadata)
  - Audiences
  - Business models -are they the right fit for all?
- Need to be aware of barriers to good collaboration
  - Communication
  - Time (including time differences)
  - Shared aims
- Allow enough time for good planning!

What now for NALIS?



Lessons learned for NALIS (1)

- Collaboration has been a great success for NALIS
- You need to celebrate this success, and congratulate yourselves on your collective achievement
- You must make the success of NALIS visible to the people of Bulgaria, to government and politicians
- You have built up great momentum and need to keep this up.
- Look to broaden the collaboration – widening the partnerships.
  - With other sectors in Bulgaria?
  - With European institutions?
  - Role of the National Library?

Lessons learned for NALIS (2)

- You have demonstrated both leadership and commitment. You need to keep this up!
- Develop a vision for the future to command support from the core group, and excite and enthuse others.
- Develop a business case for sustainability and continued growth and investment
- NALIS is national ‘knowledge infrastructure’ - government should play a key role now in sustaining this, as it does in other parts of Europe.
- If the government is serious about education, and the knowledge economy of Bulgaria, it should invest in its academic libraries and in this key piece of knowledge infrastructure.
